The second was that she was sleeping in a bed. As is not uncommon with babies, it took at least some time for her to learn how to sleep upright. (Had I not been so desperate for rest, I would have brought the dog in to sleep on the bed in order to allay the baby's fears.) But it was a long time before she could reliably be brought to sleep in her own bed. Related: Mommy, Where's Daddy? I had previously avoided the dreaded question of "how do I get my baby to sleep?" to myself, but I was pushed into the corner by my desire to secure a night of uninterrupted sleep. My desperation for sleep grew to such an extent that I started looking for workarounds for the problem. I would try to avoid putting the baby down at night and instead make it a rule that she would never be put down to sleep without a strict caveat that I wanted her to stay awake with me. I would then try to get the answer to the question "how do I get my baby to sleep?" on my own, and fail miserably. Puns are my jam. I love a good pun. "How do I get my baby to sleep?" I failed miserably. I wasn't so much interested in learning how to get my baby to sleep, but in the method of choice that other parents used to achieve such a feat. It is a technique that I will highlight here, as it's one that hasn't come up very much in parenting discussions, and even if it has, I haven't quite been able to figure out how to implement it into my life without everyone calling me out on my own tactics. I like puns. A pun is a play on words, but it can also be a way to describe something related to a greater detail, as in "I want to sleep, but my baby won't" or "Mommy can't sleep, so she wants to share her blankets with you." I had always assumed that the title of this particular article fell in line with the latter example, that I wanted the baby to sleep but I didn't. 388ed7b0c7

Andrew Schmookler has been a dedicated amateur photographer for over eight years. The project that is about to unfold could be his last. Before I start with the description of the project, let me tell you a little more about Andrew and his work. Andrew is a student of photography at the University of British Columbia in Canada. He began his journey with an entry-level single-lens reflex camera, and started fumbling with a manual focus lens in 2009. This year he was given his first Olympus 35mm lens for Christmas. In the last few years, Andrew has participated in several photo contests. He is an active member of the the Vancouver Camera Club, the Sunday Camera Club, and the UBC Photography Club. He currently holds the title of Royal Photographer for the Royal Photographic Society of Canada. His work spans many areas including: architecture, nature, street photography, travel, commercial, and most recently, candid portraits. I am really glad to be able to share his work with fellow photographers of all skill levels. This project came to be because of a series of circumstances in his life. In the fall, he was put on a bus to Europe to visit his dad. He had planned this trip for over four years, and he had been to Europe twice before on business trips. However, the current trip was different. Because of the distance from his home in Vancouver, he couldn't take his laptop and large collection of images, so he packed up a small digital camera (Fujifilm S9). His trip was going to be rough: a twenty-hour plane ride, several transfers by car in another country, and a long bus ride to the Czech Republic. I asked him if it was even possible to get more than a couple of images, and he laughed and assured me that he could make a trip of it. He also had some artistic goals, that he had been contemplating for a long time. About two years ago, he learned of a quote by Rembrandt: "Art is not what you see, but what you make others see." Andrew agreed that this quote was a more accurate way of describing art than the "Beats and Blurbs" of the advertising world. He also realized that his talent doesn't lie in the acquisition of knowledge, but in the communication of ideas and concepts. After arriving in Europe, Andrew attended a free art exhibition at the Prague Museum. He wasn't expecting much, but was

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an apparatus and a method for inkjet printing and, more particularly, to an apparatus and a method for inkjet printing capable of precisely controlling the inkjet printing operation in accordance with the changing states of a printing plate, i.e., the condition of printing paper which is set up in a paper feed device of an inkjet printing apparatus. 2. Description of the Related Art Recently, inkjet printing, which is a non-impact printing method has been widely used. This printing method is performed by discharging a minute droplet of ink toward an object to be printed, to thereby cause the minute droplet of ink to adhere to the surface of the object to be printed. In addition, the object to be printed is required to have a predetermined electric property or a predetermined optical property. In other words, the object to be printed is required to be prepared in advance in accordance with the kind of the ink. In general, the object to be printed has a working surface having a predetermined shape, for example, a regular or uneven shape on the surface. In the event of a regular shape, the object to be printed is required to be printed on a regular working surface. In the event of an uneven shape, the object to be printed is required to be printed on an uneven working surface. The inkjet printing operation may be roughly classified into three types, i.e., the drop on demand (DOD) type, the continuous wave (CW) type, and the continuous stream (CS) type. The inkjet printing operation of the DOD type is performed such that a printing head discharges ink drops for printing at predetermined time intervals. In this case, the inkjet printing apparatus includes a print head for discharging ink as the printing head, and it is necessary to form an ink passage as the inkjet printing apparatus. Further, the inkjet printing operation of the CW type is performed such that a printing head continuously discharges ink droplets and the ink droplets are adhered to a printing medium for printing. In this case, the inkjet printing apparatus must include a storage unit for storing ink, and an ink supply unit. Further, the inkjet printing operation of the CS type is performed such that a printing head continuously discharges ink droplets and the ink droplets are directly adhered to a printing medium for printing. In this case, the inkjet printing apparatus does not have a storage unit for storing ink and an
